As you know, most of the office jobs like Admin, Secretary, HR executives and office assistants are playing a variety of responsibilities including, business correspondence, customer service, communications, employee relation, business ethics & practices, Public relation, petty accounting, purchasing, and other follow up and operation related jobs inside the office, people who wish to become office executives must be organized individuals, demonstrating common sense and negotiation skills and monitor standards. In order to handle stress, motivate employees, take strong decision, written communication skills & be flexible, we need a set of 'transferable skills', skills that are not specific to one particular career path . Overseeing other employees requires them to be effective business communicators, as well as being able to interact with many different individuals in a professional manner.
